14. University Teaching and Mentoring Roles

Teaching

2024-Present Course Instructor, Healthcare Quality and Equity, 5 graduate students for 2.5hours/week for 13 sessions

This course will familiarize students with foundational concepts and empirical research related to quality and equity in health care. Key questions include: How do we define quality and equity in health care? What are the strengths and limitations of prior studies of the quality and equity of care in the US? What are the key drivers of inequity in the quality of health care? What strategies have policymakers and other actors in the health care system used to improve care in the US and internationally, and what have we learned about the effects (and unintended consequences) of these efforts? What research gaps exist related to health care quality and disparities? And what are the most promising directions for future research? This seminar is intended for students who seek to become independent researchers in health services and policy. It will focus on developing students' ability to engage in (a) critical thinking, (b) teamwork, and (c) research-question formulation because these are among the three most important skills for public health researchers.

2025-Present Course Instructor, Scientific Grant Writing for Public Health, 20 graduate students for 2.5 hrs/every other week for 2 semesters

This course focuses on providing knowledge and experience in creating high quality public health research grant applications. Course objectives include developing significant and innovative scientific hypotheses, learning principles of effective written communication, and developing a research grant application suitable to submit for funding. Designed for Public Health School PhD students, post-doctoral fellows, and Masters students with advanced degrees (e.g. MD, PhD).

2012-2023 Course instructor, Topics in Clinical and Translational Research, 9 graduate students for 1.5 hours/week for 12 sessions

This course provides a forum for clinician-investigators in Brown University's Masters program in Clinical and Translational Research to present and receive feedback on their ongoing research. Students present grant proposals (including K awards and R-series grants) and ongoing projects.

2007-2020 Course Instructor, Measuring and Improving the Quality of Medical Care, 16-20 graduate students for 2.5 hours/week for 14 weeks.

This course focuses on the science of measuring and improving the quality of health care. Students engage in a semester-long quality improvement project with an organization in the state of Rhode Island. In recent years, students have worked with Healthcentric Advisors, the Rhode Island Medicaid program, the State Health Department, Lifespan teaching hospitals, the Providence VA, PACE Rhode Island, and Neighborhood Health Plan. Several students have continued this work as masters theses and peer-reviewed publications for scientific journals. Former students have gone on to positions in quality improvement including at Lifespan, Tufts Medical Center, State government, and HealthCentric Advisors.

2016 Co-Instructor, Health Services Research Methods I, 5 graduate students for 2.5 hours/week for 14 weeks

This course is part of the core methods sequence for all 2nd year doctoral students in Health Services Research.

Mentoring

The Table below lists the 44 individuals (8 current and 37 former) that I have mentored since 2009.
