Current Projects

Social Inclusion Policies

Building on work in Nepal, Indonesia, India, and as a consultant to the World Bank, I am working on conceptions of social inclusion – integration, assimilation, solidarity, belonging – that inform national policies around the world. From affirmative action and reservations to participatory budgeting, these policies combat exclusionary practices and promote the incorporation of marginalized groups. In addition to contributing to the 2013 flagship report on social inclusion of the World Bank (Inclusion Matters: The Foundation for Shared Prosperity, 2013), I advised the Indonesian Peduli project that coordinates the social inclusion actions of hundreds of civil society organizations in that country and consulted with the United Nations in preparation for the 2016 Sustainable Development Goals on inclusive development..

Southside: The Decline and Rise of an Inner-City Neighborhood

Based upon a decade of ethnographic and historical research and three waves of a neighborhood and control group survey, this book takes the sociological “community study” in a new direction, one that situates neighborhood racial and socioeconomic change in the longue durée. It examines how external forces at multiple levels constrain the efforts of local actors to shape their built and social environments.

Immigrant Integration in Berlin

Based upon participant observation, interviews, and a survey of new immigrants and their service providers in two Berlin neighborhoods, one in the former East, the other in the West, the study examines how Muslim Turks and Arabs, Vietnamese, East Europeans and other newcomers conceive of social integration in Germany. It emphasizes the local context into which immigrants integrate and their reception upon arrival and over time in shaping their settlement, institutions, and social relations. Preliminary results have been presented at Humboldt University, University of Illinois-Chicago, Harvard, and Georgetown and published in German Politics & Society. Presentations are scheduled for January 2015 at Harvard.

Why Is Co-op City Still a Co-op?

Based on research in historical archives, field work on site, and interviews with key informants in 2012, this research asks why Co-Op City did not “privatize” like many other Mitchell-Lama moderate-income housing projects in New York City.

The Return of Urban Fiscal Crisis

I organized panels comparing urban fiscal crises at two conferences, Urban Affairs Association in April 2013 and the ISA RC21 in Berlin in August 2013. My paper puts the Rhode Island urban fiscal crises in historical and comparative perspective. In the fall of 2013, I received funding from the Ford Foundation and Dean of the Faculty Lectureship Fund to hold a two-day conference at Brown University on “The Return of Urban Fiscal Crisis” assembling financial experts, public officials, and scholars from around the United States and Europe.

Muslims in India

With a seed grant from Brown’s India Initiative and a fellowship from the American Institute of Indian Studies, I am collaborating with Ashwini Deshpande of Delhi School of Economics on a quantitative study of Muslim socioeconomic disadvantage in India.
