DEI WORK

Community Health and Advocacy & Mentoring: Received The Warren Alpert Medical School of Brown University Profile in Competence Award in 2016 for work in community health promotion and advocacy. Prior to and since that time, have mentored medical students and residents in their own community work including refugee health education, overdose prevention, support and education for teen parents, as well as in collaborations with the Rhode Island Department of Health around perinatal mental health, overdose, and equity in healthcare. Have presented and published on much of this and other related work.

Academic: As Assistant Dean for Student Affairs at The Warren Alpert Medical School of Brown University, had major focus on student equity with regard to accommodations, mistreatment and the learning environment, mentorship, and collaborations around equity and anti-racism work. As a member of the Aquifer Family Medicine board and Curriculum Lead for Family Medicine within Aquifer (a nationally recognized health professions education organization) have focused on ensuring the Family Medicine curriculum represents diverse patients receiving inclusive care, promotes anti-racism and equity in healthcare. Helped lead the collaborative writing of Aquifer’s Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion statement. In current role as Course Co-Director for the Leadership course within the Primary Care-Population Medicine Program at The Warren Alpert Medical School of Brown University, have focused on expanding guest speakers to better represent the diversity of people who serve as leaders; have added discussions of how to incorporate equity and inclusion in leadership within course curriculum.

Public Health: As consulting physician and consulting medical director at the RI Department of Health, a significant portion of my work is dedicated to health equity, particularly my roles in the Title X Family Planning Program and the Refugee Health Program, as well as the three state death review committees.

Clinical: Throughout my clinical career, I have provided primary care for patients who are traditionally underserved by the healthcare system, in two of the four core cities (Central Falls and Pawtucket) in Rhode Island. Additionally, helped open and was one of the first clinicians to care for students in a school-based health center in Central Falls, designed to help alleviate health and education inequities in that community.
